SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 6.

How a FIVE DOLLAR BILL WAS LOST.—United States Treasurer Spinner Tuesday received the following interesting particulars of the destruction of a $5 note from a genius down in Georgia:

DEAR SIR—I send you for redemption a fragment of a $5 bill, the rest of which was destroyed under strangely careless circumstances. Having just received the bill, I dropped it in my pocket, in company with some ragged tobacco, and after supper, taking a chew, I chawed money, tobacco, and everything, leaving scraps of the bill and fragments of the tobacco. Next morning I discovered the sad catastrophe, and "went for" the mustache, and, "like the baseless fabric of a vision, left not a trace behind."

Vainly was I bending, looking, and with both my eyes alooking. Looking for my lost spondulic, like the lost Field of Ure, I sought in vain. Looking for the well-chewed fragment which I lost the night before—Only this, and nothing more.

"Spuds," quoth I, for thee I pine, gone to where the woodbine twine: Gone, departed, doomed and faded: gone to fragments desecrated: Gone, as I've already stated, where thy worth no longer shineth. I follow—thou art gone before!

Seriously, the money (the rest of it is entirely destroyed, and if you wish the proof, send me and enclose the note in the envelope I send, and the proof shall be satisfactory. Very respectfully,
